Chapter 1 by Brock Thompson

Walter was a very successful businessman. All his friends liked him, his family loved and appreciated him, and he had a lot of money. He could've retired two years ago, but he loved his job too much.

Walter was a good man. And good men are what we need in this age of technology, of terrorism, of politics.

One day Walter was coming home from work when he saw a car pull up in his driveway. Walter slowed down and parked his car and watched to see what was happening. To his surprise, his 17 year old daughter Nicole got out of the car, as did an older man in a suit. He stomped around the car to Nicole and slapped her.

"Don't ever try to escape paying me!" The man said angrily, "If you ever do again, I'll take you to the house and keep you there until you die!" With that, the man slammed his car door shut and left Nicole in the driveway crying.

Walter was the angriest he had ever been in his life. Somebody had just slapped and threatened his daughter. Walter backed up his car and followed the man.

Walter was a smart man and he knew he had to follow the man, he had to be stealthy and follow him to wherever he was going. He followed the man for a good 20 miles until he pulled into an alley between two factory buildings. Walter parked his car on the other side of the street and quickly got out to follow on foot.

He walked up to the alley and peeked around the corner. He saw the man get out of his car. The man walked up to a metal door and knocked three times. The door was opened and the man walked in.

Walter went down the alley and knocked three times on the door. The door was opened but all he could see inside was darkness. All of a sudden he got punched in the stomach and aggressively got a sack put on his head. He was pulled into the building and the door slammed shut.
